Baker/Jackson White Paper to help update Interlibrary Loan

A revolution is underway, thanks in part to the work of Shirley Baker and Mary Jackson, who have co-authored an important document outlining problems with and solutions for making interlibrary loan -- a key success factor for libraries -- able to carry the growing load.

Libraries have always worked together in a variety of arrangements to borrow and lend books and journal articles. And the system has worked well, for the most part, until recently. Explains Mary Jackson in an April 1993 Wilson Library Bulletin article on the subject: "The current interlibrary loan system which is really a collection of networks, consortia, systems, and even friendships - has many strengths. The interlibrary loan environment however, is strained by its success."

The white paper, entitled "Maximizing Access, Minimizing Cost: A First Step toward the Information Access Future", describes the current state of interlibrary loan, and was written for presentation to the Association of Research Libraries' Access Committee. In the document, the authors set forth what's wrong with the system - exploding volume, inefficient and complex charging and billing procedures, slow delivery systems and lack of comprehensive management and statistical information - then shared their ideas for improving the process. "The paper describes an ideal interlibrary loan environment - a vision arrived at by combining educated guesses with a rubbing of the interlibrary loan crystal ball,"

High School Teachers Receive Information

 And Support From The LibrariesWashington University contributes to the health and vitality of the St. Louis educational community in several ways. The Libraries do their part by hosting orientation sessions and giving courtesy borrowing privileges to area educators who demonstrate a need or have a special interest. On July 8th, the Libraries were called upon to participate in a summer learning program for new high school teachers. Carol Antoniewicz, Rudolph Clay, Dency Kahn, Bill Olbrich and Vicky Witte responded to the call and volunteered to conduct a library session.

The International High School is the new magnet school in the St. Louis public school system specializing in international studies. To prepare for the opening this fall, about 70 teachers spent the day in a "Summer Inservice Program" at Washington University. As part of this program, two sessions were offered, each lasting about one and one-half hours. Vicky Witte introduced the session, then handed the program over to Rudolph to introduce the group to our online resources. Carol, Bill - and Dency described the role subject specialists can play in research.

The goal of the program, according to James McLeod, Dean of Arts & Sciences, was for the group of teachers to "look on Washington University as a valuable and accessible partner in education." The librarians who participated in the orientations helped the University meet that goal, providing the teachers with useful information to assist them in their new endeavors. No doubt many will become regular patrons.

Jackson writes. "Our ideal scenario imagines a patron-initiated interlibrary loan supported by automated financial accounting and management systems. The purpose of describing this ideal world is to merge near-term improvements with long-term desirable changes."

The Jackson-Baker white paper is receiving positive attention at national conferences and from library system vendors. Co-author Mary Jackson is currently working full-time as a Visiting Program Officer at the Association of Research Libraries to make the recommendations in the paper a reality. Dean Baker says the job at hand is to bring together libraries and system designers to make positive changes. Dean Baker will report to the Library staff on the latest developments in this fast-moving process in the third week in August.
